

No-Cost Training Announcement Regional Collaboration & Tribal Partnerships

Historical events, such as 9/11 or Hurricane Katrina suggest that when the United States is confronted with a terrorist attack or with a major disaster, either natural or man-made, that event usually impacts multiple jurisdictions within a given region. Therefore, a regional approach to homeland security is needed to prepare for future emergencies.

Regional Collaboration & Tribal Partnerships is designed to develop the tribal and non-tribal collaborative partnerships necessary to create, expand, and sustain homeland security regionalization initiatives. Course content incorporates elements of an existing successful regionalization initiative model. Topics include an overview of capabilities-based planning; homeland security policies and procedures; existing resources; and start-up policies and procedures, including developing strategic plans, timelines, MOUs, organization structure and modus operandi documents, bylaws, and research tools.

This course is open to all tribal and non-tribal community leaders and individuals representing offices of homeland security, public safety programs, law enforcement, governmental and non-governmental organizations, schools and post-secondary educational institutions, social service programs, tribal and non-tribal business entities, private sector corporations, and medical organizations. This course includes lively interactive discussions, hands-on activities, valuable take-home resources, and continued learning opportunities. Those who attend this course serve as representatives for their communities for the development of a subsequent workshop-based course, Next Steps to Regionalization.
